The sticktight flea differs from the others in that when it has once attached itself to a host it remains with its mouth parts immovably imbedded in the flesh. Chickens suffer in particular from this pest and for this reason it is sometimes called the chicken flea. It is frequently seen in dense masses also on the ears of dogs and cats. It is difficult to loosen it from this hold and its destruction therefore presents some difficulties. Fairly good results are obtained from the local application of kerosene and lard in the proportions of one part kerosene and three parts lard, but if used too freety this may injure poultry.
